Picked Cotton on Old Farm.

Mrs. Trautmann and Mrs. Dunn were the Oates sizers, "Miss Laura" and "Miss Mame," when the dream of empire was born in the brain of Laura oates. They and their brother, W. J. Oates, of Cape Girardeau, had inherited from their mother a farm, the value of which, for cotton growing, was impaired by the frequency of overflows. As a farmer's daughters they had picked cotton as other farmers' daughters they had picked cotton as other farmers' daughters did. Then Louis Houck, of Cape Girardeau, had built a railroad through there close to the Oates farm, and Dr. Granville M. Hayes had prevailed upon him to establish a station on the Hayes farm ad-

Hayes had platted his farm as a town site and had given Houck each alternate lot in exchange for locating the station there. And that had been the beginning of the metropolis of Hayti.

"Miss Laura" pictured in her mind a greater city than Hayes had dreamed of. She platted her farm lying on the opposite side of the new railroad and embarked upon a career whose ultimate ramifications astounded the financial wiseacres of the section.

McFariand, trustee, was directed to advertise for sale the property which the $10,000 had been ob tained. He went to the Court House in Caruthersville to obtain a descrip-tion of the property from the records and discovered that an entry of satis-faction of the deed of trust had been made. J. W. Pogue, who had caused the entry to be made, said he had received through the mail what purport-ed to be the canceled note and had caused the entry to be made as a mat-ter of routine.

Investigation disclosed that entry of satisfaction had been made on other loans and the subsequent loans had been obtained, among them one of $6,-000 from the county. In nearly all in-stances the satisfaction had been entered by a person to whom the note had been assigned, as the law allows, and the recording officer had no means of knowing that the canceled note offered was not the original.
